many sections of the country the crop is now at its best. The usefulness of ice on the farm cannot be exaggerated. One who has made a business for fifteen years of storing ice says that five years ago he remodeled his old icehouse. A description of the remodeled structure follows:

It is 12 by 14 feet and 12 feet high on a two foot stone foundation. The studding is oak, 2 feet 8 inches, sheathed on both sides and filled between with sawdust. From the studding a two inch furring projects out with the siding on this, making an air space sufficiently large that the sides of the building are kept from becoming warm by the cool current which passed from the ground up and into the ice chamber. A 12 by 18 inch blind at each gable permits a free circulation of air and is in my estimation better than a cupola, as there is more of a draft over the ice. There are double doors four feet wide extending from the foundation to the eaves. A 4 by 4 inch as it is drawn up. In this way only three men are necessary at the building, one to unload and two to pack. Beneath the building a number of eight inch tiles are set on end, with a little piece of board over each. On the dirt floor are six inches of sawdust. The cakes of ice are set on edge, each tier being finished and covered with a layer of sawdust before another is begun. It is better not to have the cakes too close together, so that the sawdust will sift down between. Sawdust is as it does not leave air spaces and also prevents the cakes from freezing together so solidly. When filling loose boards are placed in front of the doors, and about ten or twelve inches back of them is filled in with sawdust. The icehouse is filled from a pond about a mile away. Ice saws are used and the cakes cut from twenty-five to thirty-five inches square. A common wagon box will hold two tiers, thirty cakes of eight inch ice. The capacity of this icehouse is forty tons, but of course any size could be built on the same plan, and a larger one would keep the ice in a much better condi-
